The goal I have set for myself is pretty much my hobby, the pen and paper game Dungeons and Dragons. My goal is to make the way me and my friends play dungeons and dragons more professional and easier. This goal is important to me because I play this a lot and I would like to make it funnier and more realistic.

To go about making the game better Firstly I would have to buy miniature figures for the characters and monsters, but it's not that simple, I want them to look halfway decent so I am going to paint them too and it isn't easy because of their extremely small size and detail. These Figurines do not come cheap either, they are about six dollars for two Dwarves (little men).

Secondly I would need a dry erase grid so I could draw more rooms and walls and other items or landscapes. This grid is very expensive, thirty dollars, so I will have to save my money.

Lastly I would have to make a good campaign that people will enjoy, that they will play for more than one session. It has to be fun and deep at the same time. It has to be one people will want to play all the time so I can be a Dungeon master longer.

In conclusion I need to make playing Dungeons and Dragons with my friends funnier, and to accomplish that I need Figures, a dry erase grid, and a good campaign. It will be expensive and a lot of hard work but it will be a lot of fun and definitely worth it.
